In the Peking Gazette of the 28th ultimo is published an interesting memorial from the Acting Viceroy of Nanking with regard to lekin taxes. It has apparently been proposed to re-open certain inland Custom Houses in the province of Kiangsu, and orders have actually been issued to this effect at the instance of the Beard of Revenue. But the Vicercy objects that it would be virtually impossible to raise further Customs taxes in addition to the lekin, which is already more than sufficiently oppressive. He admits that if the Customs duties could be advantageous from a revenue point of view but the mercantile classes, greaning under the burden of the lekin tax now prevaiting, are not a day without longing for measures for to office, which was only a few months ago, he has, he says, received multitudes of petitions from the mercantile community, and despite ... . Customs taxes, even though the scheme were, by a great effort, carried into execution, it would merely result "in draining the pond to take a haul of fish "-in other words, killing the goose that lays the golden eggs. And, as he points out, this would scarcely conduce to the recovery of the prosperity o the country. The folly of overweighting trade with grievous and intolerable taxation sought to be apparent to any Government. "Not only does it tend to diminish trade and thus decrease the revenue, but it engenders a spirit of discontent among the people—a feeling that they are untairly treated. The the first floor of a house in Jardine's Bazaar. mercantile classes in Chinaare, it is notorious, driven in self-protection to make use of all kinds of devices to evade some of the numerous imposts levied upon their goods. But the natives have not been seen in possession of any ornaments made of precious metal, from which he infers that gold does not exist on the island. The Malay inhabitants seem industrious and peaceably disposed, and Mr. Macleay is of opinion that a thriving trade might be established with them. The island is, unlike Australia, pretty densely peopled. and individual possession of the land seems to obtain in the country. NEW GUINEA EXPEDITION. We have been favoured by Mr. Macleay, the leader of the Expedition that left Sydney some great island of New Guinea, with a condensed we lay before our readers as below. The exnecessary scientific instruments for making main object being, not as is generally and erroneously, supposed, the discovery of gold. but the determination as to whether Papua offered a desirable field for English colonists; or would pay for settlement. To these primary objects were added the desire to explore for geographical purposes this vast island, and for scientific objects to determine various moot points affecting its inhabitants, flora, and fauna. The expedition has been absent five months, and Mr. Macleay has now returned to Sydney, vin Somerset, per the (s.s.) Singapore, with the collected fruits of considerable research and much valuable information regarding this strange land. After leaving the Australian shores, the party first proceeded to Kootoo, on the western side of what Captain Moresby bas called the Gulf of Papun: The country here was carefully explored, and though the soil was fertile in the extreme, no trace of gold or other minerals was observed. They penetrated up a river on this coast for a distance of over ten miles, and found the country himost a dead level. with numerous swamps and lagoous. In this locality they made a large collection of specimens of native arms, ornaments, &c., with botanical and natural history collections. Among other valuable plants found, there was the castor oil plant, discovered by Mr. Eady, Sir William Macarthur's representative. After having examined all the country round for a considerable distance, the Chevert then sailed for Hull's Sound, and landed at a point on the eastern side of the island, about 25 miles north of Redscar Bay, where a fortnight was passed in a general exploration of the country. During this time they penetrated into the country by the River Ethel, for a considerable distance, but found the country still level and flat. The soil here was very rich, being a very fine and deep loam, and the formation seemed a sort of limestone concrete. No indications of gold were found there, and Mr. Macleay's opinion is that no gold exists in the low lands of the island. and if there be any auriferous country found, it will be discovered at the range that seems to form the backbone of the country and which, with its

THE NICKEL MINES OF NEW CALEDONIA At the request of several gentlemen interested in mineral discoveries, Mr. John Higginson, of Noumea, New Caledonia, threw open for inspection on the 20th ultimo a large quantity of army, which acquire more than ordinary interest nickel ore from the celebrated Billan Mine. The lot inspected is the second shipment from this mine, and consists of 150 hogsbeads. It seems the ore from this mine is altogether a new ore, being a very pure sample of hydrate silicate of nickel, and it is said will assay a very high per practice. The Turkish military servine is of centage. Mr. Higginson who is interested great number of the principal mines of New Caledonia, being very much dissatisfied with the returns received from England of ore from. the Montd' Or Mines sent home for treatment, has resolved to creet smelting works in Noumea. Commissioner Cluny, of the Mining Depart. ment in New Caledonia, has assayed a portion of the kind exhibited, the publication of which is reserved until Professor. Liversidge, the Rev. W. B. Clarke, Dr. Leibius (of the Miet), and Mr. J. G. Latta have given their results. The intention of Mr. Higginson after getting assays from these gentlemen is to have a consultation and learn if any difficulty really exists as to the treatment of the ore. Mr. Higginson has been assured already that no difficulty exists. that a single smelting process should suffice, the ingredients being silien, water nickel, with a tine, of magnesia and iron. REMARKABLE CONDITION OF THE TURKISH ARMY. The Press, of Frankfort, publishes some particulars derived from personal observation, respecting the present condition of the Turkish during the present juncture of affairs in tha East. For the past thirty years the principle of compulsory service, and the graniention of a solid system of reserve, have existed in Turkey; but they have never been seriously put inte twenty years' duration, viz. four years in the line; two in the first reserve; six in the second breserve; and eight in the Landsturm. But, as is well known, the whole of the population has never been called upon to render military service; and, although the Turkish Empire has a population of 36 millions, the army is recruited from amonyst the 18 millions of Mussulmans, whilst the other 18 millions composed of Christnins, Jows, &c., are, on paying contribution, exempted from ac vice. The reason given for this is, that the Turkish Government does not consider the non-Mahommedan portion of the population worthy of bearing arms; the real motive would, however, appear to be that it fears to confide military weapons to a class of the inhabitants which has always shown itself ready to revolt whenever an occasion should present itself. At the end of last year, the Turkish army, on a war footing, consisted of 586,100 men. The Turkish infantry is, for the The uniform of the cavalry is of a dark colour, and without ornament. Extracts. HE CAPTIVE COUNT: OR THE BEAUTIF (Paraphrased from the Germon of Goethe.)

I known a flower—a beauteous flower— For which, as here I lie Within these hated prison-walls I breathe full many a sigh; For in my freedom's happy days That flower was ever mear me; Would I might see it once again ; Ah I how the eight would cheer me!

Who can it be, O gallant Count! But I, the royal Rose? For am I not, beyond compare, The noblest flower that grows In field or garden?—and since thou Are graced with knightly armour, The regal Rose, the queen of flowers, Must surely be thy charmer!

I own the sweetness of the Rose Her dainty sense invites; And well I know her crimson robes The maiden's eye delights; But she is not, with all her charms, The flower that most I.hanour I love another—would that I Again might gaze upon her!

You Rose is over proud, I ween, To hold her head so high : Knowest than's flower, in field or bower. -- One half so fair-as-I ?-----The nure in heart esterm me most. And if thou livest purely. Thou for her maiden purity,

.. Most love the Lify, surely! My knightly housur, Lily fair. Is clear of any stain: Yet none the less I here ordure A dungeon's weary pain; Than thine, I know, no saintly heart From earthly fault is clearer :

The Pink must be the lovely one, "That casts the witching spell: There's not a flower of all he tends, The gardener loves so well: In colour bright to please the sight I surely am completest; And then, of all the flowery tribe, • My adour is the sweetest!

And yet the one I'm thinking of To me is vostly dearer!

The Pick I own a brilliant flower The gardener ill could snare: Its gorgeous colours charm the eye; Its odour fills the air: But though the flower that I desire Is not one half so splendid, to the no Pink was e'er so sweet That ever gardener tended!

If randest beauty, noble Count For once were bold to speak, Perhaps it is the Violet Which thou dost fondly seek? If I am she thou pinest for, I would that I were near thee .-Companion of thy prison life, That haply I might cheer thee!

COUNT. The gentle Violet 1 prize: For who but loves to praise The maid whose pure and dainty charms Are graced by modest ways? But not upon the mountain's side Ts found the humble blossom Whose beauty fills with tender love The captive's yearning bosom.

It lives beside von winding stream, A flower of azure hug. That seems to say, "Forget me not; For I am ever true!" And though a captive here I lie, That gentle voice con waken Hope, love, and joy; for thus I know

WILFRID LAWSON. In his speech at the temperance demonstration at Brayton, Sir Wilfrid Lawson said :-Diesent day editors and writers of newpapers could not conceive it possible that any human being could be perfectly happy for 24 hours without having a sup of drink. When he read their remarks, he was reminded of a story which he once heard told by an Irish gentleman, who was a teetotaler, and who had an uncle who was very fond of a drop of whisky punch. The Irish gentleman wished to convert his uncle, and he wrote to him. "Dear uncle, do give up drink: I am sure it will lengthen your days." In about a -week he got an answer to his letter to this effect -" Dear nephew, I am much obliged to you for your advice. I have taken it. You were quite right when you told me it would lengthen my days, for the day I gave un drink was the longest day I ever spent in Here is one marking the introduction of tea: That excellent and by all physicians approved China drink, called by the Chineans Tcha, by other nations Tay alias Tee, is sold at the Sultan's Head Coffee House, in Sweeting's Rents, by the Royal Exchange, London. Coffee and chocolate were not long after the subjects of many announcements : one man says he sells "the right coffee powder, from four shillings to four and sixpence per pound as in goodness, that pounded in a mortar at two and sixpence a pound. Chocolate might also be obtained at from four to ten shillings under the house-seal-Morat the Great. Negro and mulatto boys, which were then the fashion in England for pages, are constantly advertised for as runat ways, and often offered for sale. Dishones-servants who had absconded were but too numerous, and almost all are described as "pook-marked." So accustomed were persons to the ravages of this disease, that it was not deemed unpleasant. Louis XIV. who was considered the handsomest man in France, was thus disfigured, as well as Mademoiselle la Valliere and other beauties of the period. Houghton, in his weekly newspaper, "a vicaridge and another cure which requires service but once a month, value £86. Tis in Kent, about sixty miles from London." The use of second-hand sermons, too, appears divine or their relicts have complete sets of MS.
